

CHINA

an international journal

---

volume 3, number 1
March 2005

EAST ASIAN INSTITUTE
National University of Singapore

---

published by Singapore University Press & World Scientific

contents

research

Education in Rural Tibet: Development, Problems and Adaptations

There is a critical need to accelerate the education of rural Tibetans. They see migrants from elsewhere moving in to take advantage of jobs for which they are poor competitors while they struggle to pull themselves out of poverty. Home, school and community factors all contribute to low attendance rates among the students.

by Gerard POSTIGLIONE, Ben JIAO and Sonam GYATSO ..... 1

When Peasants Sue En Masse: Large-scale Collective ALL Suits in Rural China

Peasants angry at local governments are the main users of the Administrative Litigation Law (ALL). Scale is advantageous in collective action, but other factors come into play such as group solidarity, leadership structure and fear on the part of the courts that ruling in favour of ALL suits will encourage a massive filing of them.

by Yuen Yuen TANG ..... 24

Foreign Trade Law in China and its Revision

The 1994 Foreign Trade Law of China was enacted when the country was at a critical juncture on the road to economic development. A decade later, it required updating in order to cope with new trade developments both at home and abroad. China's accession to the WTO made reforming the Trade Law particularly urgent.

by GAO Yongfu ..... 50

Economic Growth and Income Inequality in Hong Kong: Trends and Explanations

The Hong Kong Government has long boasted its success in using the laissez-faire approach to economic development. Indeed, the citizens of Hong Kong enjoy a high GDP per capita. However, income inequality is high, has worsened in recent years and will likely become even more serious. All solutions discussed are inevitably highly political.

by Simon X. B. ZHAO and L. ZHANG ..... 74

comments and notes

Dissemination of International Humanitarian Law in the People's Republic of China

The focus of international humanitarian law is the protection of the victims of armed conflict. China has actively begun to accede to international instruments which regulate it, adopt domestic legislation which implements it and take steps to disseminate it.

by Roderick O'BRIEN ..... 106

|                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |     |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| The Rise of Online Public Opinion in the People's Republic of ChinaAre Chinese online forums a promising sign of the rise of a reasoning civil society, or are they merely meeting places for the rash and politically extreme? It would seem that politically-interested citizens on the Chinese internet are indeed driving public opinion, and ultimately, policy-making.by Johan LAGERKVIST ..... | 119 |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|

|                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |     |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| The US-China Trade Imbalance: How Big is it Really?Neither the US nor China trade imbalance figures are likely accurate. The overall trade imbalance is probably much smaller than what the US reports and much larger than what China reports. Its impact on the US is not as harmful as the official figures may suggest.by Sarah Y. TONG ..... | 131 |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|

|                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |     |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| Power Shortages in China: Why?The Chinese Government urgently needs to improve the planning and administration of its provision of electricity. Shortages of electricity were first noticed in the spring of 2002. In the summer of 2004, they were acute and without question hindered economic growth.by Elspeth THOMSON ..... | 155 |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|

China-ASEAN relations

|                                                                                                   |     |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| Chronology of Events: April to September 2004compiled by YOW Cheun Hoe and TOK Sow Keat ..... | 174 |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|

|                                             |     |
|---------------------------------------------|-----|
| Documentscompiled by TOK Sow Keat ..... | 184 |
|---------------------------------------------|-----|

Co-Chairs' Statement of the 7th Health Ministers' Meeting and the 1st ASEAN+3 Health Ministers' Meeting

Joint Statement of the ASEAN Plus Three Labour Ministers' Meeting

Joint Ministerial Statement of the ASEAN Plus Three Finance Ministers' Meeting

Joint Ministerial Statement ASEAN, China, Japan and Korea Energy Ministers' Meeting (Manila AMEM+3)

ASEAN China Foreign Ministers' Informal Meeting Joint Press Release

Securing a Win-Win Partnership for ASEAN and China (keynote address at the ASEAN-China Forum 2004)

Joint Communiqué of the 37th ASEAN Ministerial Meeting

Chairman Press Statement of the 5th AMM+3

Chairman's Statement of the 11th Meeting of the ASEAN Regional Forum

The Third ASEAN Economic Ministers and the Minister of Commerce of the People's Republic of China Consultation Joint Media Statement

EAI mission

To promote both academic and policy-oriented research on East Asian development, particularly the political, economic and social development of contemporary China (including Hong Kong and Taiwan), and its growing economic integration with the world and the political and security implications for the region.